At least 26 people killed in shooting in Texas church

SPECIAL COVERAGE

A possible motive was not disclosed by authorities.

A gunman entered a small church in southeast Texas and opened fire, killing at least 26 worshipers and wounding many others in the latest in a series of mass shootings that have plagued the United States, according to authorities and media reports.

The shooting suspect was identified as 26-year-old Devin Patrick Kelley, according to CBS News, which reported his name based on federal law enforcement sources.

The shooting occurred at the First Baptist Church in Sutherland Springs in Wilson County, about 40 miles east of San Antonio. The suspect fled the scene in a vehicle but was killed about 12 miles away in neighboring Guadalupe County, according to local media and Sgt. Robert Murphy, a spokesman for the Guadalupe County Sheriff's Office said.

Wilson County Sheriff Joe Tackitt told CNN that at least 20 people were killed. Texas Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick told Fox News that at least 25 people were killed and 30 injured.

The 14-year-old daughter of pastor Frank Pomeroy was killed, the family told several television stations.

The massacre comes just weeks after a sniper killed 58 people at an outdoor concert in Las Vegas, the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history. The shootings have stirred a yearslong national debate over whether easy access to firearms was contributing to the trend.

President Donald Trump said he was monitoring the situation while in Japan on a 12-day Asian trip.

"May God be w/ the people of Sutherland Springs, Texas. The FBI & law enforcement are on the scene," he said on Twitter.

Witnesses said that about 20 shots were fired at about 11:30 a.m. during the church services, according to media reports. It was unclear how many worshippers were inside at the time.

After the shooting, the suspect sped away in a car and was soon cornered by sheriff's deputies just outside of Wilson County in Guadalupe County, Wilson County Commissioner Larry Wiley told Reuters. He did not know if the shooter died of a self-inflicted gunshot or was killed by deputies.

The First Baptist Church is a fixture in Sutherland Springs, an area home to fewer than 900 residents, according to the 2010 Census.

The white-painted, one-story structure features a small steeple and a single front door. On Sunday, the Lone Star flag of Texas was flying alongside the U.S. flag and a third, unidentified banner.

Inside, there is a small raised platform on which members sang worship songs to guitar music and the pastor delivered a weekly sermon, according to videos posted on YouTube. In one of the clips, a few dozen people, including young children, can be seen sitting in the wooden pews.

The shooting occurred on the eighth anniversary of the Nov. 5, 2009, massacre of 13 people at the Fort Hood Army base in central Texas. A U.S. Army Medical Corps psychiatrist convicted of those killings is now awaiting execution.

In 2015, a white gunman killed nine black parishioners at Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Charleston, South Carolina. The gunman was sentenced to death for the racially motivated attack.

ENOUGH EVIDENCE TO CHARGE FLYNN: REPORTS

Special Counsel Robert Mueller has collected sufficient evidence to charge Michael Flynn, President Donald Trump's former national security adviser, and his son, NBC News reported. NBC News said Mueller's team was looking at possible money-laundering charges, lying to federal agents, and Flynn's role in a possible plan to remove an opponent of the Turkish president from the United States in exchange

NBC News said Mueller's team was looking at possible money-laundering charges, lying to federal agents, and Flynn's role in a possible plan to remove an opponent of the Turkish president from the United States in exchange for millions of dollars. AMAZON DISCOUNTS OTHER SELLERS' PRODUCTS

Amazon is cutting prices of products from third-party sellers on its website, moving beyond its more typical method of discounts on items it sells directly. The "discount provided by Amazon" applies to products including board games and technological gadgets offered by other merchants as the holiday season approaches. The retailer has been trying to compete aggressively on some items to win sales and draw customers away from low-priced rivals like Wal-Mart. The move allows Amazon to sell the products at lower prices while still giving full price to the sellers. "When Amazon provides a discount, customers get the products they want at a price they'll love, and small businesses receive increased sales at their listed asking price," an Amazon spokeswoman said, noting that businesses can opt out at any time.

HOUSE WEIGHING IDEAS IN TAX BILL REVISION

House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan said on Sunday that Republican lawmakers are weighing a "host of ideas" as the House tax-writing committee begins revising a tax bill this week, though he expects the broad outlines to remain the same. Ryan, a Republican, told "Fox News Sunday" that House tax writers are considering President Donald Trump's call to include in the tax package a repeal of an Affordable Care Act provision that mandates individuals buy insurance coverage. "We have an active conversation with our members and a whole host of ideas on things to add to this bill. And that's one of the things that's being discussed," Ryan said. The tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee will on Monday begin considering revisions to the tax bill released last week.

The MBTA says it's ready for winter after the agency made investments in improvement projects. NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

The MBTA has made investments of more than $101M in winter resiliency since 2015

The MBTA says it's ready for this year's winter, and it wants commuters to have all the tools they need to get communication on service alerts.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Winter is already around the corner — a season that gives every commuter flashbacks to 2015 when snow blanketed the Bay State and the MBTA tracks, briefly shutting down public transportation.

Since that year, the MBTA has continued to make improvements in its winter resiliency efforts, and the transit authority announced this week that it's invested more than $101 million into improvement projects to make the transit system more resilient in severe weather.

"In advance of this winter, we're doubling down on our efforts to highlight the key resources that allow us to get the most accurate information about service out to our customers so they can make informed decisions," said MBTA General Manager Luis Manuel Ramirez in a statement.

"While we've proactively made investments in equipment and infrastructure to make the MBTA more resilient," he added, "we also want to strengthen the channels of communication we have so our riders know what to expect and can plan ahead."

The T is already urging customers to start preparing for their winter commutes by having those communication channels at the ready.

The MBTA suggested that riders sign up for T-Alerts, follow @MBTA and @MBTA_CR on Twitter, use the Transit app or the MBTA commuter rail app and visit the MBTA website to learn about service information.

Since the winter of 2015, the MBTA has upgraded "track and signal infrastructure, invested in snow-fighting equipment and stocked up on replacement parts for vehicles," the agency said.

Last year, the Boston area got 42 inches of snow, which activated the MBTA's "Storm Desk" seven times and the MBTA's Emergency Operations Center five times. However, the agency noted, MBTA service didn't see any shut-downs or closures.

"Building on the experience and investments over the past three years, the MBTA has made major progress in our infrastructure," said Jeff Gonnerville, MBTA deputy general manager, in a statement. "In the weeks to come, we'll continue our multi-faceted approach to snow preparations, from trimming trees along the Green Line corridors to installing new rail, expanding snow clearing and snow removal contracts, performing upgrades to vehicles, and adding additional backup power equipment."

"We're doubling down on our efforts to highlight the key resources that allow us to get the most accurate information about service out to our customers so they can make informed decisions."

These researchers are creating snakelike robots to help search-and-rescue efforts

Two researchers at the Worcester Polytechnic Institute won a three-year, $400,000 National Science Foundation award to develop their robots.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

After a natural disaster, like the recent hurricanes that ravaged the Caribbean or the back-to-back earthquakes that devastated Mexico, search-and-rescue teams need to navigate dangerous conditions to try to survey the damage and find survivors.

But what if robots could go in their place, slipping easily through the dangerous rubble to collect information and images? The rescue teams could stay safely away from any further building collapses or potentially toxic conditions.

That's the hope of Jie Fu and Cagdas Onal, two researchers at the Worcester Polytechnic Institute in who are developing a robot to support search and rescue teams.

Though many rescue robots have been developed over the years — and were used in disaster relief efforts as far back as 9/11 — Fu and Onal have a different vision for theirs that strays from the clunky, box-like, "hard" robots.

Theirs is a snakelike, soft robot that they say can help rescue teams stay safe while also being more effective in their efforts.

"The problem [with other robots] is that since their lengths are rigid, if they want to go into tight corners, or maze-like passage or squeeze through a hole, the rigid body will not reform, it will jam itself in these conditions — the same conditions we get in search-and-rescue efforts," Onal said, "On the other hand, with soft [robotic] bodies, you can negotiate tight passageways much better."

Onal and Fu recently received a three-year, $400,000 award from the National Science Foundation to create their autonomous, snake-like robots.

Along with the "soft" body (made of silicone rubber, which protects the internal electronics), that reptilian comparison is a crucial and unique part of their design. The researchers were inspired by how snakes move and control their bodies.

They're working on programming these robots to raise their "head" while moving forward to get a better view of the environments they're exploring.

"If you look at biological snakes, they do raise their heads and keep it almost at a stationary pause, so they get a better view, and an unshaken view, of their environment, even though their body is rotating like crazy," Onal said.

Programming in such three-dimensional capabilities will also allow the robot to go up stairs or through a hole to take measurements and pictures, and they're developing algorithms so the autonomous intelligence can make its own decisions about how and when to best move around.

Fu and Onal hope to start working directly with rescue teams as part of the three-year award once their technology is a bit further along, but even aside from that application, they think what they're developing with this soft robot will set the stage for safer robot-human interactions of the future.

"This soft robotics side is a little broader than the snake robot. Having some mechanical and physical elasticity in the body of robot makes them much more safer in human environments," Onal said. "Regardless of the one application of a search-and-rescue snake robot, soft robotics, in general, are more friendly, they actually behave similarly to the human body, they're weaker than rigid robots so they're not able to hurt you. ... They can work in collaboration with workers, a manufacturing environment and many other things where humans are present."

Anna Friel's provocative new turn

Why "The Girlfriend Experience" star wants you to watch the series for more than the naked, writhing bodies.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

It's a cold, sunny day in England. I'm not there, but Anna Friel tells me so over the phone, and I believe her. When I gripe about the past week's inconsistent weather, she quips, "Makes you question the whole climate change thing, doesn't it?"

We're chatting over the phone to talk about her latest effort, the second season of "The Girlfriend Experience," which premiered on Starz last night. The 41-year-old stars in the first seven episodes as Erica Myles, a Republican financier embroiled in the dark side of midterm elections. Navigating the world of American politics wasn't exactly easy for the Rochdale, England, native. "My God! Your country is so vast," she exclaims. "It took me so long to decipher what was going on."

"What I asked American people was, 'Can you explain this? Can you explain that?'" she continues. "It was surprising how few people could, they'd say, [here she lightly adopts an American accent] 'It's really hard for me too.' I feel like you've got to study politics for years to understand such a complex system."

The series has its fair share of political intrigue — "I think it's going to be quite controversial given the current timing with politics and everything we're dealing with at the minute," Friel notes — but the most galvanizing part of Erica's arc is her burgeoning relationship with escort Anna, who offers the titular girlfriend experience.

But it's not just the same old: Erica and Anna's relationship plays not-so-delicately with dominance and submission. "I think what was very fascinating was how [the series] portrays feeling powerful in submission and vice versa," she says. "Or how you can feel very submissive when you're in a position of power."

And while, thankfully, there is no sexposition, there is little left to the imagination. Friel, of course, realizes this, but wants to urge audiences to look beyond the naked, writhing bodies.

"It's not unnecessary. We've got to concentrate on it as a piece of work," she says. "I've never really had an issue with nudity as long as I didn't ever feel like I was made to do it or thought that it was salacious. But if you're dealing with something where you know that sex is going to be involved, it's something that we really shouldn't shy away from."

After 10 minutes or so, I'm reminded I have time for one more question. But before I can finish my sentence — "I wanted to talk about 'Pushing Daisies'" — Friel is gushing.

"Having a beautiful love story and something that's so optimistic is so important. That's what was beautiful about ['Pushing Daisies'].

"We've all talked about [a reunion]," she continues. "I know Bryan [Fuller, the creator of the critically-acclaimed series] wants to do something, we just have to make sure we all don't get too old." I can almost hear her grinning over the phone, she's so gleeful. "Never say never."

PATS MOSTLY SUCK AFTER A BYE WEEK

@burke_metro

Judging by Belichick standards, the Patriots absolutely suck after the bye.

Since 2010, the Pats are just 4-3 after a bye week.

That's just not up to snuff for a team that regularly loses just three or four times a season.

The conventional wisdom says that if you give Belichick an extra seven days to prepare for a team then he'll thrive. Not quite. If anything, the Pats have been using that first game back after a bye as an opportunity

Rob Gronkowski and the Pats came up empty after the bye week last year in a loss to Seattle. GETTY IMAGES to knock off the rust ... and THEN go on a lengthy run the rest of the season starting the week after.

We don't have to go back too far for evidence of this. The Pats lost their first game off the bye last season at home to Seattle, 31-24. It was the last game they would lose all season.

The Pats had a relatively easy schedule after the Seattle game last season, beating the 49ers, Jets and Rams before taking down the Ravens and Broncos.

Also this:

In 2013 off a bye, the Pats played at Carolina on a Monday night and fell, 24-20.

In 2011 off a bye, the Pats actually dropped two games in a row: a 25-17 decision in Pittsburgh and a 24-20 loss at home to the Giants.

It won't be easy for the Pats this year after the bye either. The Pats play at Denver this coming Sunday night. Even though the Broncos got absolutely annihilated Sunday at Philly, winning at Mile High is never an easy task — particularly for the Patriots.

Bye weeks can obviously come at different times in the season

NFL Week 9

There were several blowouts on Sunday as the Eagles, Saints and Rams all made a case that they're legit contenders in the NFC this season. Here are a look at Sunday's scores:

Jaguars 23, Bengals 7
Eagles 51, Broncos 23
Saints 30, Buccaneers 10
Colts 20, Texans 14
Panthers 20, Falcons 17
Rams 51, Giants 17
Titans 23, Ravens 20

MATT BURKE

each year, so let's look at it this way instead: How do the Pats fare in the final two months of the regular season — the time when Belichick says you really get a good feel of what kind of team you have — each year?

The answer here is absurdly well.

The Pats are a whopping 47-12 from November through the end of the regular season each year since 2010. Last year they went 7-1 down the stretch, in 2014 they went 6-2, in 2013 they went 6-2, in 2012 they went 7-1, in 2011 they went 8-1 and in 2010 they went 8-1. The only outlier season was 2015 when the Pats started the season 10-0 before losing at Denver, at home against Philly, at the Jets and at the Dolphins in the final two months of the year.

The Patriots' schedule down the stretch this season is not easy: at Broncos, at Raiders in Mexico City, vs. Dolphins, at Bills, at Dolphins, at Steelers, vs. Bills and vs. Jets. Those teams have a combined record of 21-18 this season.

But the Pats still at least resemble the Pats and they'll always be in the mix as long as Belichick is manning the No. 1 headset and No. 12 is under center. With that, there's no reason why they can't go 6-2 this November and December and finish with an overall record of 12-4.

A 12-4 mark should be good enough to get one of the top two seeds in the AFC and a home game in the divisional round. Given the season-ending injuries to Julian Edelman and Dont'a Hightower, and the overall lack of confidence from Pats fans right now in regard to this being a legit Super Bowl contender — everyone should sign up for 6-2 the rest of the way.
